updates on the insane world of money and power

Americans Should Pray Gold Is Not Re-Valued

This article, in essence, is a redo of an article I posted during the 2024 election. But reading it over, I see how relevant it is for today. So, here it is.

My wife had me listen to a Presbyterian minister speaking to world affairs. Basically a good guy, but limited in his geo-political and economic assessments. He spoke to an affiliation between Trump and Putin, without giving examples. It's seldom I hear anything positive said about Putin by someone in the mainstream. There is no need for examples—bad Putin is assumed.

About the economy, the clergyman just scratched the surface. He spoke of all those billionaires getting rich using our internet, shared roads, etcetera. To balance it out, they should pay a wealth tax. But, should they?

Just because they use the roads/internet to their advantage while others are home in lazy-boys eating chips, should they be special-taxed out of their wealth? Begs a question: how did we get to where we need their wealth?

When you have a Trump/Biden spending money like they own a blue state, most billionaire wealth would not suffice to pay the interest on the national debt. Granted, billionaire wealth has become absurd, but it isn't because of shared roads and internet. It's because there is no fair playing field. It's because these pigs abide next to the money trough/spigot, and when it get turned on they are right there to benefit. They are the cronies of power, a reality where leaders and cronies are each the problem.

Once a wealth tax is law, how long is it before they come after everybody's wealth—to give Trump another $500B to raise havoc across the globe? And how many Miriam Adelson dollars does Trump redistribute to cronies to assure that his reign of terror remains—the order of the day?

A wealth tax tells another story. Taxes get raised so elites do not have curtail spending. They keep on spending and we keep on paying until we are each homeless and starving. There is no plan to curtail the ability of the Bezos/Thiel/Trump to gain unfathomable wealth. Or any plan to curtail spending. And definitely no plan to return to rule of law—the US Constitution.

Go ahead and pray gold gets revalued and wipes clean the debt. It's not gonna matter. Gold will be re-valued, but instead of the US getting to use its supposed 8200 tons of gold to wipe clean its debt, the US will be exposed (as was British PM, Gordon Brown, who sold off the UK gold holdings at $252), as greedy, gold-less liars—who squandered the American republic.

Instead, the coming re-pricing of gold, possibly in excess of $100,000 an ounce, will expose the United States as the greatest debtor nation in the history of mankind—as having attained 4th world status. And silver, an economic bargain, manipulated sideways for what seemed forever, will join with gold—rocketing far beyond gravitational pull.

When I heard (maybe on Silver Stackers), what price gold will have to attain to clear-away our national debt, a Jerry Jeff Walker line came to mind: 'Lucy Fay Lorraine makes a side bet on the game.' I'm your Lucy Fay—and I'm betting we have no gold.

How many pure silver mines are there in the US? If you guessed none—you got it right. Silver comes as a bi-product of base-metal mining. So, when Bill Holter's prediction of a total credit collapse comes to be, and there are no loans for mining, or demand for the products mined, and silver is once again money—where will the silver come from?

It won't come from anywhere—instead it will mimic currency. When too much currency is printed—that's inflation. Too many dollars chasing the same or fewer products. But, when fewer dollars (no credit), chase products, the price of those products by necessity comes down. That's deflation.

What happens when gold re-prices and silver (given non-existent silver mines), is forced to reprice faster than gold to make up for decades of manipulated pricing? Each existing silver ounce will be re-priced, playing catch-up with gold—beyond what any of us might envision.

Two things are in play: the US economy, which will collapse—and the elite. In an economic collapse the elite do not go away. Instead they act like a wounded beast, from which it is best to stand back until you can ascertain the wound is mortal. If you want trouble, mess with elite control or money.

One reader suggests that I start the process of becoming an American rather than a US Citizen. This was all the rage 3 decades ago when some friends made a company persuading Americans to move their dollars offshore into hidden bank accounts. Change their status to American/not US.

At the time, I saw it as a combined attack on both elite monetary and political control. I advised my friends that VP (at the time), Cheney would come after them with the business end of a claw hammer. Which is what happened—most went to jail. Besides, I'm likely on enough lists as it is.

The US economy, without a re-pricing of gold that we don't have, is in desperate straits. Soon (if not now), unable to raise taxes enough to pay the interest on the debit, our government will be the only last resort buyer for our bonds. There's no options when there's no means to play the game.

To simply maintain, we print, cut entitlements, cut defense, then default.

We're told the US won't default? Even when the Federal government is out of options? Maybe the dollar unwinds gradually, incrementally, with dollar depreciation supported by foreigners with massive debt, denominated in dollars, needing dollars to service debt. To pay they sell-off dollar-denominated treasuries to pay debt—as a way to defend their currencies. Without renewed dollar-denominated debt, what happens as this cycle plays-out, coincidental with a 40%, gold-backed, BRICS settlement currency?

Global gold-backing will be assured through gold auditing—any nation wanting to participate in gold-backing will need to audit. If my surmise is correct and Lucy Fay wins her side bet on the game—that's all she wrote for the US economy. Without gold/productive economy, the US will be at the mercy of a long-time WEF mission, making use of 3/4s of a million, military-age felons Biden/Harris let-in—to bring-on a globalist plan for our republic.

Just how bad-off is the US economy. Just under the lies, we find CPI and wages in the same range—but the subterfuge used to keep the economy looking strong omits energy/housing/insurance, which, when added in, makes for intolerable economic conditions.

For example, consider American pensions. There's this thing that's become popular, PRT (Pension Risk Transfer). Because private companies (and government), can see the writing on the wall, indicating they will not be able to pay-out promises made, they hand-off to insurance companies, in one-time buyouts, lucrative, but short-term deals to take pensioners off their books. All done with no regard for the ability of pensioners to sustain.

What's the value of a contract that can't be fulfilled? Are pensioners' futures safer with insurance companies? One major insurance company failed in 2022—6 failed in 2023. A few insurance companies gleefully accept pension funds (1st quarter 2022—$2B, 1st quarter 2023—$7B. 1st quarter 2024—$14B). Dismissing future payouts, buried in treasuries, betting on the US dollar, corporations handed-over $60B in pension funds to dollar/dependent insurance companies—for 2025.

When the dollar goes, who will get blamed? Gold will be attacked as the messenger, along with anyone who bought gold—those hoarders stagnated economic growth. At a time when it's imperative we defend ourselves, US stackers (Russia), will be blamed for exchanging dollars for gold.

What are the economic realities for the BRICS? I heard today that China's manufacturing base surpasses the US/EU taken together. Is that true? The reality is opaque. Pundits tell us China is on the brink of collapse. But in 2026, China is making its biggest gold purchases. At the Shanghai exchange, unlike in the US, Chinese currency is freely exchanged for gold—trading as little as 10 grams of gold. In NY, the minimum is 100 ounces.

Why is the Chinese yuan rising against the dollar? Iranian oil needs to be purchased in yuan is 1 reason. And, with a low 10 year interest rate in China, debt in yuan is exploding in anticipation of rising interest rates/prices.

When elites need to shift blame, any rationale works, as in the insanity of making the US #1 in crypto and AI, begging the question of non-existent US gold holdings and how AI will function in a non-productive US economy?

And what about the absurdity of Bessent giving permission for China to import Iranian oil? But only under the condition that China exports everything the US needs to defeat/subjugate China. I'm writing that article now.
