Can A President Negotiate a Treaty To End The Bill of Rights?

To what depth has the US sunk that a question such as my title could be taken seriously—as is the case. Regarding the national landscape, what changes and behaviors are creating circumstances for the Constitution/Bill of Rights to be abandoned/nullified?

A simple question: Are we willing to cede our individual rights to a group of unelected bureaucrats—or a despot? No matter your political persuasion (or lack of), this is the germane question for 2023—a looming unknown that we soon will have to reckon with.

A newly-minted WHO treaty hopes to accomplish what 'Klaus and his little Schwabs' have labored towards: complete takeover of the minds and bodies of all humanity. To that end the WHO has repurposed a draft treaty that not long ago read something like the Bill of Rights—with emphasis on the freedom of the individual. But, the latest draft reads like 'coffee table' literature found in the Karl Marx Reading Room at any exclusive Ivy League college for 'white kids only'—"Taught To Hate U". Individual rights guarantees have given way to 'collective equity'—actionable towards 'the good of all'.

A document reportedly replete with 'undefined terms': 'terrorism', 'misinformation', 'pandemic'—left to the 'head bureaucrat' to define. And, though they swear to not misuse power—this recalls 'comic book' back pages: 'Can you find the 9 hidden tyrants?'.

Ideologues can't be argued with or displaced with a counter ideology—ideology is shaped by 'discursive' emotions, not by fact. Calling up my 'simple question': Are we willing to cede our individual rights to a group of unelected bureaucrats—or a despot?

Can the 'collective' pull this off? The simple answer is, if we lose focus—yes. What they first will do (knowing they need 2/3rds of the Senate), is put this treaty forward as an addendum to an existing treaty, which it is not—this treaty nullifies the Constitution.

Bringing us to a question of whether or not a president (with or without the Congress), can give our rights over to a global WHO that will have the power to decide 'everything' about our lives? No matter what the 'geeks' at Harvard (or wherever) tell us, there is no constitutional provision to give away the rights of American citizens. Article 2 gives the president the power to negotiate treaties—which must then be passed by 2/3rds of the Senate. This lunacy has nothing to do with treaties—this is slavery.

Elite lunacy found in the 'twitter dumps' is more heinous and pervasive than even 'conspired'. And it's everywhere (my last article looked at it in Pharma). We see organized parents (along with lawsuits—ICAN), going after school boards for pushing kids toward sexual transition and self-hatred. And, at the college level it's even worse.

Across the country, at colleges and universities, ideologues have either taken over or gained footholds—throughout. For a long time, through graduate school, I entertained the idea of teaching at the 'junior college' level until I butted-heads with a 'commie prof' whose hero was Mao. My term paper analyzed Mao's childhood as having shaped his views. She failed me—the school went into an uproar—and I reassessed my future.

Now is then—X100. Those 'button-down, go along with the program 'mid-wits' I went to school with became college professors, despots hellbent on disallowing discussion, and questioners—in favor of 'ideological collectivism'. They deal with Ron DeSantis disallowing 'wok-ism' to be taught to kids, by disregarding the law (as have 12 states, disregarded the Supreme Court's reaffirmation of the 2nd Amendment). Professors, with assumed 'woke' student support, cling to an ongoing mission—to cancel curiosity.

Biden and the 'left' are fully signed on to the 'globalist' agenda—requiring that citizens engage in an all-out 'battle' against 'collective equity'. In 2023, we need to be prepared for the unspeakable—a 1930's Berlin brought to a street near you. At the college level, students not following dictates, are now 'turned-in' as 'extreme' and reportedly visited in dorm rooms by the FBI—to determine if they pose a danger. This kind of thing existed in the past but not to this extent—back when a Bill of Rights was not 'extreme'.

A reader reflected on my writings: "Have you thought about your own musings and what happens when the mill starts grinding smaller grist?" How would I deal with a knock on the door from a couple of FBI agents? It's a question I don't want to dwell on but one I've thought through. We need to deal with our fear of authorities now—because we may have to deal with them later. Do we stand up for ourselves or do we submit? As Westerners, we've lived in comparative safety for decades but those days are gone. Now, writing/reading articles may bring 'rogue agency' agents—with guns.

It's a common meme that the Constitution won't protect us—but it has. We are armed—but are we dangerous to those who disregard an oath to the Constitution and come after us because we insist on our constitutional rights? Do we insist they have a warrant before entering our home? Do we draw the line at 'vaccine' CO2 passports?

When the decision has been made to not submit to tyranny, knowing that possibilities may become livelihoods, fear subsides, and we can focus for important decisions.

Assuming you have taken care of arming yourself and stored food, it's vital to think about your dollars. The dollar (as with 'vaccines'), has been weaponized to where its basis as the reserve currency functions on 'duress and necessity'. Loans are in dollars so, for now, the world needs dollars, but limits involvement—while dedollarizing, ASAP.

Look what happened to Russia's reserves: the rest of the world sees that and knows it could happen to them. What else they see is that 'fiat currency' is coming to an end—and digital currency based on a failed currency lasts only until that currency collapses.

I get asked by some, with substantial dollar holdings—what to do. Say you have a 3% loan on a large mortgage that you could pay down but you have a building project in the works that now requires a 7% loan. In normal times, you would use your dollars to build 'out of pocket'. But the demise of the dollar might be closer than we know—and you could be left with a 'called' mortgage and no funds to build. So, 'you got nothin'.

These are not normal times. This is the end game where the only question is how long we have. We know one thing: real stuff will be money. Is your wealth in 'real stuff'?
