Hitler's Hubris Is Trump's Hubris

My last article focused on the haplessness of both political parties, and the impact of Trump's political adventurism on the US and the world. In this article I want to dig into how Trump's political misadventures translate into the US economy—and root out a commonality in the hubris of Trump and Hitler.

But first, from Micheal: 'I'm curious how the mood of America moves, and I suppose the midterms are a good barometer to watch. Otherwise, what will change? The executive branch remains...the judicial branch (Supreme Court) stays the same. Only an ineffectual, deadlocked Congress changes some faces, but will remain ineffectual and deadlocked. The result of a Blue Wave will amount to more harassment of Trump via committee investigations/resolutions. Ultimately pointless. State and local elections in November are something else. They matter. Stocking up on silver, gold and lead.'

I agree with the stocking-up on gold and silver. Are we at a price bottom today? It doesn't matter. What are you going to do, sell your gold for dollars? Then what? The reasons we got into gold and silver are more intact than ever. But what about silver down from $120 to almost $50? Should we buy into that? Maybe we'd rather buy into Trump's coming dollar collapse?

I don't agree with Michael about the 'ultimately pointless' thing. A vindictive Trump destroys anyone in his way (whether a person or nation), at any cost—leaving only a hope that rational minds will invoke the Constitution to run Trump's sorry ass out of town. Do these rational minds exist? Not likely.

My title aligns Trump with Hitler—with so many shared parallels. Begin with a comparison of Stalin and Hitler. Stalin had murdered countless Russians, but under the Nazi invasion, Russians rallied around the Motherland and Stalin. This lesson was not lost on Stalin and he later adjusted his attitude, giving the power to his generals to fight Hitler.

Like Hitler, Trump learns nothing from his mistakes, instead he takes control of every battle, on every level. Rather than beat a strategic retreat in Gaza, Iran and Ukraine, he doubles down, missing his chances to declare victory and walk away. Instead he digs the holes he's in—deeper.

At Moscow, in late 1941, the temperature dropped to 30 below. Germany, expecting a quick victory, had no winter clothing. Sentries were found, frozen upright each morning, but Hitler allowed no retreat. Then came summer 1942, and Hitler made another blunder, splitting his remaining forces. The 6th Army went for Stalingrad and the rest headed south to take the oil fiends at Baku. Neither happened. Instead, the Wehrmacht was surrounded in a pincher movement at Stalingrad, and the movement south resulted in the largest tank battle in history, at Kursk, played-out on German terms. In good weather, with Wehrmacht superiority, the Russians won the battle. At Stalingrad, Paulus defied Hitler and surrendered his army..

Can anybody out there see Trump making a decision to extricate himself from the mess he's created? It's not about diesel, it's a world changing event—and as it did for Germany, the event will unfold, not in Tehran or Kiev, but in DC—as it did for Hitler in a bunker in Berlin.

What have Trump's politics done to the US economy. Just about every political act taken by Trump, outside the US 12 mile limit, is a product of de ception. Consider Rubio parsing Trump's war on Iran: it had to be done because Iran used the years of US democrat rule to develop a missile system to make them invulnerable to attack. That was Iran's mission: create a safe space to develop nuclear weapons. What load of crap.

Trump's economy? Trump says $20T has come into the US under his administration. It's actually $232B, which is $30B below the 10 year average. It's all blather and lies. Nations appease Trump with promises of investment—they don't mean to keep. They're dealing with a mafia 'Don'. They bide their time, with a hope that like the fog—he moves on.

Foreign capital? 94% of foreign US investment under Trump buys US companies. 4/6% does business start-ups. And, if 'Sleepy Joe' was a China/Ukraine bagman, Trump is worse, raking it in to enhance a family fortune while buying votes with a check to service members and a promise that if republicans win, each US adult will receive $5000 (updated to every year), along with a $90 SS rebate. Doesn't that describe constitutional criminality?

Anyone calling for lower interest rates, given our economic condition, is out of touch with reality. Trump's desire for lower interest rates is all about Trump power and enrichment of family/friends. Higher interest rates are the cure for out of whack markets. Lower interest rates only hasten our demise. Higher rates restore clarity to markets.

And I make no apology for focusing on Trump's politics when assessing the economy. Anyone not doing so should ask themselves why they are being protective of Trump?

Why so many see Trump as unpredictable misses the point. He's more predictable than not. Consider the confusion generated around Trump, Zelensky, and Putin. Trump tells Zelensky to go after Russia as he may—but stay away from diesel refineries/storage. The rationale? Rising diesel price undercuts Trump's chance to win the midterms.

Keep in mind that Trump is a transparent liar. Don't lose sight of the fact that Trump would revel at Zelensky taking out Russia's energy base if Trump hadn't been so stupid as to have attacked Iran—creating an energy crisis. One need only to remember that a simple-minded Trump plans to control the world, and his method of control is energy. To this end, Russia has to fall. Iran has to fall. Along with any nations with oil reserves.

Here we are, half the way through October, with midterms looming. Cost of living, not matter any obfuscation Bessent prattles about, is the top issue for American voters. If sanity prevails, Trump is set to lose both houses. But it ain't necessarily so, unless Americans can see through his chicanery of buying votes, and a silly promise from Putin to send diesel (not enough to tip the scales)—that likely won't happen. It's a Trump midterm PR stunt that angers the EU/Zelensky, while offering Russia another half year to sell energy, fill its coffers, and focus on Ukrainian surrender.

There was no way for Russia to beat the Germans at Stalingrad or Kursk, just as, seemingly, there is no way for Iran or the Houthis to stand-up to a hostile world. But it can happen.

Trump deserves the fate of a murderer but, admittedly, that empowers globalist idiots from the left. I'm not voting for any democrat, but each cycle, I pray we vote the bums out—and Trump is an imminent global threat.

We have to take back our republic from those who have no business in it. Remember who came out as ardent Zionists after October 7th, and supported what NATO did in Ukraine. Remember who pushed the clot shots. Remember the hypocrites who continue on as if nothing at all happened.
