The Bill of Rights Isn't Dead—It's Just Being Ignored

There are times in human history when the world goes mad. On the brink of such an event, I pray we don't go off the edge. On a hopeful note, would-be attendees to WEF gatherings are withdrawing in 'droves'. Maybe 'globalism' is failing? Don't count on it.

Doctors that prescribed ivermectin (with good results) get forced into re-education to keep licenses—but the re-education site shows ivermectin as highly successful in the treatment of covid. And, only 1 person in Congress voted against a resolution to brand criticism of Netanyahu as 'anti-semitic'. Why would legislators bother with such petty bullshit? Notwithstanding Gaza/Israel, Netanyahu is corrupt, with 4% approval in Israel.

I asked a friend (a trucking manager in the thick of it), if he could help gain employment for someone I know who recently certified as a truck driver. He could not, but his reply took me back to my novel: 'The Audit' (posted at neverhadaboss.com), where economic collapse happens out on the highways in a breakdown of long-haul trucking.

Though I didn't know Bill Holter when I wrote that novel, Bill put the math to my words with his explanation that the collapse will be a 'credit event'. Imagine a world of marauding bands searching for food/gasoline/whatever. Truck drivers won't leave their families exposed to make a coast to coast run for nonexistent dollars that don't spend.

My trucking friend made some comments: "There are some changes occurring in the industry recently. I am seeing less transport activity along my runs down I-5 to Eugene. UPS, FedEx, XPO, Cheema, Old Dominion, usually run a lot of triples this time of year. Truck traffic the weeks prior to Thanksgiving was really light in my opinion. In good times the traffic would be really heavy. Also, not as many drivers parked at rest stops or truck stops for sleep. I am trying to be as objective as possible here. Is traffic light or am I imagining things? You know what I mean? Also, I have noticed that clients are not paying us on time and certain accounts now have a 10-day window of credit. Something has happened for this to occur." This won't make CNN.

Let's shift to the causes behind the events—and the lies we are told about the causes. When leaders (en masse), are fully ensconced in the absurd, what are we to make of it? To understand, we have to 'go deep' into causality—to make the world simpler.

An overview only works when it brings facts to questions, across a wide spectrum. Many of us are besieged by questions that have arisen over this last decade: Such as: who pulls the levers of power—and do they pull those levers out of stupidity or evil?

Some answers to our questions can be found in organizations such as CIC—Council for Inclusive Capitalism, responsible for 'fine-tuning' a moving narrative as it shifts importance from something debunked, such as RussiaGate, to something that was yet to be debunked, such as Covid. Who are these intermediaries (CIC)—and with what end?

They oversee a conflation of global corporatism with a 'far left collectivism' (also drawing from a mindless right). Although the CIC 'talks the good talk', their intent is to 'dragoon' corporations into an 'ideology' wherein they willingly forgo profitability so as to stay away from the wrath of a political agenda/ideology of 'identity, inclusion, equity...

It comes to a head with Elon Musk (whatever you think of Elon), telling big-moned advertisers to 'go fuck themselves'. Reporters gasp, calling him 'unhinged', but Elon, willing to risk $40B in support of 'free speech'—in taking this step is 'hinged' patriotism.

Let's sort this out. What happens when journalism got corporatized. The purpose of journalism is to be adversarial to established power. But unlike Musk, the 4th Estate, as with corporations, has, for a paycheck and recognition, curtsied to 'identity politics'. They gasp at Musk because they can't imagine a reality, other than where they exist.

Besides elite shifting of the narrative, billions are pumped into dumbing-down the electorate, which will prove our greatest obstacle. Reporters cannot question the narrative if they are too stupid to realize there is a question that needs asking? Bad enough is the realization that an ideology based on 'identity politics' cannot be negotiated with.

The problem breaks down to a power struggle between elites, who not only travel to 'Jeffrey's Island', but on the way flirt with possibilities for Intelligence agencies to mine data bases with a goal to restrict travel for those spreading/sharing 'disinformation'. Within a non-fact-based elite 'ideology', misinformation is anything that critiques them.

The big enemies of the elite are not the 1st, 2nd, and 4th Amendments (those have been legally lulled to sleep)—the enemy is 'science', the activity of acquiring dependable information about the world. Science is too important to not be part of popular culture because it is those who ponder/reflect from, 'I don't know', who are the scientists.

Elites make laws restricting 4th Amendment right to privacy without the bother of using the process to amend the Constitution. Their mission is beyond the 'law of the land'.

Today, gold is breaking-out—but only seemingly. Gold measures the rate that the dollar—falls apart. With little the Fed can do, it's unknown whether the dollar fails, incrementally or in precipitous plunge. Either way, price of gold narrates for that event.

Economic/political unknowns come to humans—after the fact. With no way for the stock market to not correct 20/30% in short order, for now, the stock market goes up.

On a larger scale, 'dollar demise', and economic collapse are givens that will shock each of us. But, a dollar that doesn't spend will not be what matters most. Elites (government), have got themselves into a place where they will tell any lies to keep control.

Consider Venezuela, holding a referendum whether to invade (oil rich) Guyana (with boundaries settled in 1899). Maduro (VE), feels free to invade because Biden needs VE oil. Neither Maduro nor Biden can win a fair election, hence the need to cancel elections/take away rights from anyone they can—whether that be a nation or citizens.

This is where our war will be fought. Government elites, to hold power, need to strip us of the Constitution/Bill of Rights. When all hell breaks loose 'just ignoring it' will no longer suffice. They're betting the house we won't stand up to an IRS with dumdots.
