Trump's Victory Celebration—Once Again Postponed

What's the distinction between an Iranian and an American? An Iranian knows he's under attack by a nuclear superpower—fighting for his very existence, while an American knows little/nothing about why his government is attacking Iran—and could care less. Since Iran poses no threat to the US/Israel, why the murderous genocide? Trump (and his cabinet), are in the pocket of Zionism, But what Trump/Hegseth really want to break—is China.

It's a given that Trump is attempting to starve China's energy sources, without directly confronting China. Can a bull in a China shop pull that off?

As there is no strategy behind Trump's endless blunders, he simply adjusts as he goes along, hopeful that in the end China will heel—buying its energy from Trump. Beyond that plan, many of the strikes on Iran are on Chinese railway systems—without which Belt/Road isn't viable. Iran is at the heart of alternative trade outside US control.

Can Trump break China after he breaks Iran? Trump can do neither. Russia and China side with Iran and positioned to support Iran. Russia shares a long border with China, with railroads to carry Chinese armaments into Russia (about which the US has no intelligence). Russia shares an entire sea with Iran over which it can deliver Russian and Chinese supplies and weapons—which is being done as I write.

Because the US attack on Iran (Epic Fury), did not attain any of the goals outlined, the US (Bessent), has now shifted to Operation Economic Fury, designed to cripple Iran's economy. This begs the question: why didn't the US employ Economic Fury before killing thousands of Iranians? Simple: Epic Fury was assumed to conduct regime change in a matter of days.

Iran did not seek this phony cease fire—that was US/Israel—out of interceptors and offensive hardware. In Islamabad, more than 50 Iranians were there to do business. Vance was not—he was not authorized to make an agreement. He spent the negotiations running to the phone to call Trump—more importantly Netanyahu. It's gotten so bad that Netanyahu makes it clear he is calling the shots—while he murders Lebanese.

Why was Vance not authorized to make a deal? With an agreement based on Iran's 10 points, there would be no way for Trump to declare victory and TACO. So Vance had to sneak-off in the middle of the night—so Trump could live to fight another day. The big boys went home leaving negotiators behind—because Trump needs out of Iran. Did Trump miss an opportunity to claim victory with his phony blockade where fully-laden tankers pass-through, close along the shoreline where US Navy is unable to intercept for fear of being sunk by Iran? Or, has Bibi ordered further hostilities?

Trump chides Germany (Merz), for having to appeal to German automakers to build military equipment that Germany doesn't have. But, now Trump's asking for help from Ford/GM.

Donald's trying to make it look as if the US is in good shape—using our petroleum reserve to make it appear we have an abundance of oil—which we do not. As Trump's lies abound, will he be able to peddle his bullshit such that he doesn't lose the House?

What are Trump's options? I was thinking he would use his fake blockade to declare victory and walk away. Now, were I a betting man, I'd go with Trump/Netanyahu playing a 2nd to the last card (nuclear being the last), bombing bridges and civilian infrastructure to bring on a collapse. That could also involve a ground invasion. What I don't see is Trump willing to make a peace treaty when it's obvious he's the loser.

Without regime change/opening Hormuz to US/Israeli traffic, there is no way to frame what is going on in Iran as a victory. Trump is living in a fantasy world where Trump is lying. There are no agreements between Iran and the US. Trump is trapped between Hormuz Strait paralysis and potential loss of Zionist donors—his only viability for winning the midterms.

India is now buying oil in Chinese currency. And the conditions on US ships in the region are deplorable—which could bring widespread mutiny.

So, what is Trump's grand plan? Cut-off supply of adversary oil (whatever that is), to adversary nations (the names of which change by the tweet), making all oil purchases go through him. To enforce that, US sanctions are not on Iran but on those nations receiving Iranian oil/having Iranian money in its banking system. Am I forgetting Trump's tactic of piracy?

Boarding and confiscating cargo and ships on the high seas, belonging to nations with whom the US is not in declared war—is piracy. Under international law (which remains in place no matter what the Trump tyranny declares), piracy is a crime punishable by death.

That's the plan: cut-off adversary energy through theft of global oil, and conduct piracy on the high seas as means of implementation. Could there be a problem here?

This from a reader: Against all this background, there's a looming factor that no one seems to be taking into account. Oil. Steve St. Angelo stated recently that we're using up the reserves now, & there will be hell to pay, once they're depleted. And this morning I read from London Paul that the last of the oil shipments headed for the US will arrive soon. Apparently, once the disruption to shipments via the Hormuz Strait began, vessels destined for the west were diverted to the east. Yeah, Without sufficient energy, nothing else matters. Even brief periods without sufficient petroleum will wreak havoc.

More from readers: I used this to wake people up to reality: If you don't understand the miracle of oil/gasoline, try pushing a Chevy Blazer 12 miles at 70 MPH. And: Russia/Gaza/Lebanon/Iran is 'fierce nationalism' culture as seen in the Southern States during the 'War of Northern Aggression' (as they call it). They knew the north was more powerful...didn't matter. Even today, many Southerners still fighting the war, will never to 'accept' military' defeat. Over 160 years... it's yet re-membered: My grandmother grew up in Harlan County, KY. As a child, I heard her say many times 'save your Confederate money, boys...the south's going to rise again.
