The View From The Middle

Trump is such a pain in the ass. Either Trump is a Zionist fool, or Israel is his US tool. Probably the latter, with pronouncements such as: 'I can do anything I want because I'm President of the United States.' Not just a king but King of the Gods—Trump is Jupiter, who treats the rest of the gods as 2nd class citizens—there to do his bidding.

He tells us Biden drove Russia/China into alliance, when his mafioso sanctions (tariffs), cemented the Russia/China alliance. At the same time, he's the motivation behind BRICS closing ranks—with India/Brazil looking to China for a way out of US hegemony.

How about my title: 'View From The Middle'? The middle is ever-shrinking, whether it be the US middle class or how few commentators are non-aligned with the right or the left. Consider Trump's promise to his base to end useless wars. Instead he perpetuates, initiates wars. His are no different from the left—vain promises bringing slaughter.

Do you recognize how dangerous it is to have an ill-informed Jupiter making the decisions. One day Ukraine does not get long-range missiles and the next day they do. Because both parties shun rule of law, the military occupies our streets. The destruction of cities is not something the left did by themselves. The uni-party did it, cozying up to Israeli genocide and pushing our chips into a failed NATO attempt to destroy Russia.

Trump (unless the gods smile on him), is setting-up to be dealt a devastating blow by a world he neither understands nor gives its due. The US is in a race between self-consciousness and destruction, where it doesn't matter what comes 1st, economic collapse or China/Russia bloodying Trump's nose. A bankrupt dollar can't avoid either.

For Americans, what matters (other than nuclear annihilation), is the horror the bloodied beast will inflict on Americans—in a last-ditch attempt to hold on to power. It's quite possible, in worst-case scenario, the US could be one of the worst places in the world to reside. All personal wealth would be subject to confiscation through exit taxes, wealth taxes—or plain theft. All in an environment where smart coins are the currency.

Will gold/silver protect you? Maybe, but only in quiet barter, and you best be willing to live life as a coyote or a pirate. This is when we see the effects of no anti-war party.

The EU provides the trailers for coming attraction in the US. In Germany, to register as a political candidate you first have to agree to not be critical of immigrants. That's as nuts as SoCal girls who don't want a guy sharing their bathroom having to apply for psychological accommodation—it's the girls who have the problem. Basic human rights are not accommodations. So much of our culture is now rooted in mental illness.

As much as the EU functions as a portend (thrown in the slammer for re-posting an opinion), for coming US attractions, don't be thinking that crap can't be our future. Worst case: during defeat/collapse of the US, following EU example, Trump criminalizes criticism of Israel. Is it possible? Trump's Reich is going to be knocked on its ass. Just as we had opportunity to escape a Thucydides Trap by recognizing rising powers—for more than 2 decades—he/US has not. Likely Trump plays-out a power game.

What does that look like? Trump, fearing his base, supports restrictive gun laws. Soldiers on the street are just the beginning—soon there's rumor of ICE deporting troublesome American citizens. Who are they? That ever-shrinking middle of the spectrum—who's questions rock the boat. For certain, science is disregarded. But, taking a closer look, science is a subset. What is being openly disregarded are actual facts.

For example, facts around school shootings and pharmaceuticals are purportedly swept away by the FBI—as unavailable. That may be changing now. Tennessee became the 1st state to require that there be a study between shootings and drugs. Same with autism, the graph shows autism rising with kid's vax schedule, but no study.

As American middle class has mostly disappeared across the income spectrum, so has the political/economic middle, where questions, not assumptions, matter, for facts.

Having the unfortunate position of man in the middle, may bring EU-type consequence.

Consider the middle: because I refuse to align with the left or the right, I send out articles—expecting backlash. For the Biden/Obama years it came from the left. Now, it's the right. Even something that should be well-understood by now, as in, not Trump, but a security agreement with Russia would have prevented the Ukraine war. As of now it's neither understood by the man on the street nor Trump—or within his negotiating team.

This ain't rocket science. A quick 2 decades survey sees a US coup in Ukraine, followed, purportedly, by Victoria Nuland: Fuck the EU, we spent $5B to destabilize Ukraine, necessitating a Crimea referendum to secure Russia's warm-water port, Sevastopol. Then Ukraine slaughtered 15K in Donbas, planning for imminent invasion. Add to it, 20 CIA stations, bio-labs, and a weaponized Ukraine with an explicit mission to weaken/break-up Russia. Those are facts, but Putin gets the blame. And, it's the same with Gaza where morons are unable to identify that Israel and US are but murderers.

What's missing in all this is ethics and justice and the questions that come with them. When readers take issue with what I write, they seldom critique something I said. Instead, they call names. At best a nut job who sometimes gets something right. A guy to read so as to know your enemy. But, except in rarity, no counter-argument is offered.

What's going to happen? How the hell should I know? What I do know is that I live -out my own regions of doubt. I consternate over an article I sent out. I study hard— then doubt what I know. I wake from bad dreams—carry-on with unspecified stress.

The only way out for me is to become stronger. I made a list of 10 that I don't want to talk to unless they see something in their behavior that's made its way into a question.

Life's too short to deal with any who don't want to deal. Rather wash/wax my vehicles.

I'm happy about some things. I got in early with gold/silver. And, somehow, along the way, I've lost my fear of authority figures. Now I meet their bullshit with irony and jokes. Good to see this blue collar dem (last liberal), well armed, though I lack what I had back then. Thinking I need an old Winchester lever action, and maybe an M1 Garand.
