Where's America?—I Can't Find It

I'm looking around for America—but I can't find it. This ain't the Beach Boys and Elvis on Sun Records. And where's Mike Wallace on 60 Minutes—tearing into politicians for lying? Where's my senior civics class where I prepped for the test on the Constitution?

It's as if I woke up from a bad dream into an even worse acid trip. Somehow the New York Times/New Yorker magazine (sure they were a bit uptown but they were free speech rags). Now they're nothing more than spouters for elite narrative—simply liars.

It's all bullshit. So many businesses are leaving California because theft makes them unprofitable. Gavin Newson says he's working in collaboration with retailers to stop theft. No he's not. He's being forced to deal with it. Part of his offer calls for retailers to no longer be fined/charged for calling-in multiple shoplifting complaints to the police.

What the hell are police there for? Blue-states allow squatters to remain in someone's hard-earned home, pussy-footing home invasion as equity so that ne'er do wells can take possession of your property because life hasn't given them a fair chance? But, life is not fair and losers lose. All they get is a fair playing field—a field to lose on.

Tell it like it is—the uni-party government are constitutional traitors. Anybody who takes an oath to the Constitution and then attempts to censure citizens freedom under the Bill of Rights is conducting treason. Maybe they have power—but they're traitors.

The US Constitution/Bill of Rights provided for the majority of power to remain in the hands of the people. To assure this, limited government power was allotted in different measures to the States/Federal Government—making tyranny difficult to attain to.

The US President has limited, mandated, war powers, compared to what resides in the Oval Office these days. Washington/Jefferson did not conduct wars through unconstitutional executive orders, as does Biden. Congress, not the President, declares war.

The US involves itself in many wars (by other names), that most in Congress would not be able to identify. That's what Ben Franklin was referring to when he was asked what form of government the founders had given us: a republic—if we can keep it.

But that was then and this is now. It took 250 years for Franklin's warning to become reality. For 2 1/2 centuries, the bean-counters chipped away at the republic to where we now find ourselves doing the 1 man rule thing (maybe soon 1 woman rule—if God enjoys a good joke). Transitioning away from the republic, some envisioned a benevolent monarchy, when all the while we were charting a course, dead-on—into tyranny.

Despotisms are despotic—some (1) always rises to the top. That happened in the US. Any power left in the hands of the people gets a quick look now and then—in court findings that adhere to the Constitution. Other than that, all the talk about freedom/liberty is meaningless blather. States rights—good luck. The power rests in the Executive.

Well not exactly. The Executive shares in a fascism with corporate billionaires. In this fascism neither can quite decide which it is they cherish most—is it power or greed?

The degradation of our republic has been accomplished through incremental cancellation of the Constitution/Bill of Rights—a multi-purpose sell-job done to condemn any virtue associated with white Americans—or ethical lessons from the New Testament.

What is it about the New Testament they detest? Stories of redemption, forgiveness, brotherly love—each cancelled to make possible a heatless/mindless, Marxist collective, awaiting in the wings, anticipating, at any cost—another Obama coronation?

When Americans believed in God, America was a better place compared to now, under a boot heel, iron fist, of despotic rule. And when powers that be finally have their day, the United States will strongly resemble a sharia-law despotism—where there are no inalienable rights, God given rights. Instead the law of men—a rules-based order.

Which brings a fair question: am I a patriot? And what am I patriotic towards? Scott Ritter says he loves his country—sees himself as the biggest patriot. How about a different take? I'm patriotic to the legacy the founders gave us, brought forward with 'This Land Is Your Land'—women voting—slavery ended—with de-segregation thrown in.

Outside of that, am I a patriot? The word derives from father—as in fatherland. Do I offer blind support to this nation? If steps are taken to legally cancel the Bill of Rights, would I remain here—waiting/watching for a van to stop outside my door? Would you?

If the presidential election happens and the left wins, a technological horror will be inflicted on Americans. Where is my America in that? When questioners of the narrative are being treated, as were Jews in Germany during the 30's, or, as Palestinians now, do we stand and fight, or act on moving the family to Uruguay before it's too late?

But let's assume the republic is not thrown under the bus and Trump prevails in November. The economy still collapses under Trump's big spending, but not as precipitously as with Kamala's printing/price controls. And Trump, as expected, leaves Americans be, except for any such as Assange, who manage to piss-off Donald's super ego.

Still, the left alternative is much worse. Harris/Walz are opposed to liberty—each a nightmare for free speech. Harris, while a prosecutor kept men in jail after their sentences expired—for government economic gain. For that she should be in the slammer.

Trump, an American nationalist, opposes illegal immigration—he wants to deport them. The left, admixed in stupidity/evil, are behind the invasion. A collective left regards any financial burden illegals pose as a secondary problem ($5 billion spent on illegal immigrants in NYC), because they need to naturalize immigrants to reshape the electorate. Through elections, white American republic legacy, is to be faded-out.

But, mass illegal migration has a greater mission than winning elections. Millions of illegal invaders have not come here for freedom. Unconcerned with freedom/liberty, they come for what they can get—and others in a far more nefarious part of a plan.

Illegal invaders, mostly military-aged men, without families, are here to be welcomed into law enforcement/military—a path to citizenship. Without constitutional values, they'll do uni-party bidding, destroying what's left of the republic. Where's my America?
